- 33. I will sing unto the Lord as long as I live: I will sing praise to my God while I have my being.
- 34. My meditation of him shall be sweet: I will be glad in the Lord.
- 35. Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more. Bless thou the Lord, O my soul. Praise ye the Lord.

Psalm 137

- 1. By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion.
- 2. We hanged our harps upon the willows in the midst thereof.
- 3. For there they that carried us away captive required of us a song; and they that wasted us required of us mirth, saying, Sing us one of the songs of Zion.
- 4. How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?
- 5. If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning.
- 6. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth; if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy.
- Remember, O Lord, the children of Edom² in the day of Jerusalem; who said, Rase it, rase it, even to the foundation thereof.
   O daughter of Babylon, who art to be destroyed; happy shall he be, that
- rewardeth thee as thou hast served us.

  9. Happy shall he be, that taketh and dasheth thy little ones against the stones.

trink of this doubt this this

On the Euphrates River. Jerusalem was captivity in Babylon.
 The Edomites helped the Babylonians captured and sacked by the Babylonians in ture Jerusalem.

HOMER

eighth century B.C.E.

and the inhabitants of Troy, a city in conflict between a coalition of Greeks and feelings, especially our incom almost three thousand years works of Greek literature, composed Asia Minor. These are the earliest are about the Trojan War, a mythical the winners and the losers. Both poems cated in their narrative techniques, and lizations, and the effects of war on both hey provide extraordinarily vivid story of the clash of two great civihe Iliad and the Odyssey tell the Yet they are rich and sophistiof people, social ionor and violence, relationships, perore our por-

HISTORICAL CONTEXTS

and sophisticated artistic and architectralized, tightly controlled economy not to each letter)—as well as a censymbol corresponds to each syllable, alphabet but a "syllabary" (in which a therefore known as the Bronze Age. dominantly bronze, and their time is tural traditions. The metal they used ans had a form of writing-not an people the Myceneans who probably built by the earliest Greek-speaking enormous palace, dominated by monu-On the Greek island of Crete is an for weapons, armor, and tools was prein the south of Greece. The Mycenefortified cities around central palaces 2000 B.C.E., they began building big, inspired the Irojan legends. About mental arches adorned with fierce lions,

After dominating the region for around six hundred years, Mycenean civilization came to an end in around tions suggest that the great cities were burnt or destroyed around this time, perhaps by invasion or war. The next few hundred years are known as the Dark Ages of Greecs; people seem to have been less wealth, and the cultural knowledge of the Myceneans, including the knowledge of writing, was lost

Greeks of this time spoke many different dialects and lived in small towns and villages scattered across a wide area. They did not regain their knowledge of reading or writing until an alphabet, invented by a trading people called the Phoenicians, was adopted in the eighth century B.C.E.

and preserved their own past. neither historical in a modern sense modern-day Turkey. Travelling bards especially on the Ionian coast, society could have nothing like "literathe Greeks of the Dark Ages created nor purely fictional. Through poetry Asia Minor. The world of Homer is inhabitants of one or more cities in memories of a real conflict or conflicts cities besieged and destroyed by war fought with bronze, and of the great told tales of the lost age of heroes who oped a thriving tradition of oral poetry, Greek illiteracy, however, there devel-"letters" (litterae). In the centuries of ture," a word based on the Latin for between the Mycenean Greeks and in Homeric poen One might think that an illiterate make use of folk

Oral poets in ancient Greece used a traditional form (a six-part line called hexameter), fitting their own riffs into the rhythm, with musical accompaniment. They also relied on common as "swift Achilles" or "black ships"), and lines did not have to be generated pared. Fluent poetic ad-libbing is very pattern, such as the way a warrior gets and even whole scenes that follow a set phrases that fit the rhythm of the line, characters, traditional adjectives (such quite distinct from everyday reality. In B.C.E. the heroic, mythic world of the so that even in the eighth century different periods are jumbled together, anachronistic by the time these poems because the Iliad and the Odyssey tradition of this type of composition entirely on the spot. We know that the performer a structure, so that stories dressed or the way that meals are prethemes, traditional stories, traditional world, into a language unlike anything different areas in the Greek-speaking Greek dialects, the speech of many addition, the poems mix different Homeric poems must have seemed soldiers fought with iron. Details from bronze weapons: by the eighth century, were written down, such as the use of include details that would have been must have gone back hundreds of years, anyone ever spoke. ifficult; these techniques gave each studied by classicists in the twentieth in the former Yugoslavia, who were instances of oral poetic performance, ing for a while after dinner. But a comtwo: in the Homeric poems themselves, be able to keep going for an hour or ancient Greek bards. Good bards may century as the closest living analogy to including that of the oral poets living made all the more difficult because the hours. This is much too long tor an there are accounts of singers performpoems are poems would have lasted at least twenty plete performance of either of these reece, and the written texts of the dyssey and the Iliad. The question is tween the heroic poetry composed t is hard to understand the relation far longer than most audience to sit through in an evening. It would also have been difficult for any poet, even a genius, to compose at this length without the use of writing. Perhaps, then, these poems are the work of an oral poet, or poets, who became literate. Or perhaps they represent a collaboration between one or more oral poets, and a scribe. In any case, soon after the Greeks developed their alphabet, they found a way to preserve their oral tradition in two monumental written poems.

strikingly original ways, creating just from the Athenian tragedians to the illustrated in paintings on vases or on Roman poet Virgil. one in the Greek and Roman worlds bered, reworked, and imitated by every walls, read, learned by heart, remembody knew the Iliad and the Odyssey for hundreds of years to come, every War. They are long poems about heroes, a genre that later came to be called legends that surrounded the Trojan two coherent stories out of the mass of The poems were performed out loud epic hrom the Greek for "story" word." Throughout the ancient world These works make use of tradition in chose Aphrodite, and as his reward she gods-a representative of power; or dess of wisdom; Hera, the queen of the awarded a golden apple: Athena, godwhich of three goddesses should be Troy, son of King Priam, had to judge ers would have been familiar with the the Trojan War, since Ilias The title Iliad suggests gave him the most beautiful woman in Aphrodite, goddess of sexual desire. He background myths. Paris, a prince of name for Troy. Greek readers or listenthe world, Helen of Sparta, as his wife owerful general Infortunately Agamemnon. Wher ork about > city. The Greek soldiers leaped from the city to the ground. tants, captured the women, and razed the horse and killed the male inhabi Greek armed men, and tricked the built a wooden horse, filled it with gem to enter the city walls of Troy. He until Odysseus finally found a strata-So began a war that lasted ten years Trojans into taking the horse into the Paris took Helen with him back to Troy rom Mycenae, Agamemnon and Meneis mustered a great army, a coalition est runner and best seus, the cleverest of the Greeks the great heroes rom many Greek citi

THE ILIAD

how Achilles, the greatest Greek hero and the son of a goddess, becomes return to the human world. alienated from his society, how his apart from the rest of humanitycommanders. The first word of the jans, and how he is at last willing to inhuman aggression against the Trorage against the Greeks shifts into an an extraordinary thing, which sets him non, and only later against the enemy but on a conflict among the Greek conflict between Greeks and Trojans, over, the central focus is not on the Greeks and Trojans. The poem tells Trojans—is the central subject of the first against his comrade Agamemmenis, a term otherwise applied only to Iliad is "Rage," and the rage of Achilles efore the capture of the city. More-Surprisingly, none of these events wrath of the gods. Achilles' rage is any part in the main narrative or ly in its tenth In Greek, the word used is year and

The Iliad is about war, honor, and aggression. There are moments of graphic violence, when we are told exactly where the point of a spear or sword penetrates vulnerable human flesh: as when Achilles' friend Patroclus throws his spear at another warrior, Sarpedon, and catches him "just below the rib cage / where it protects the beating heart"; or when Hector rams his spear into Patroclus, "into the pit of his belly and all the way through"; or when Achilles' spear "pierced the soft neck but did not slit the windpipe." The precise anatomical detail reminds us of how vulnerable these warriors are, because they have mortal bodies—in contrast to the gods, who may participate in battle but can never die.

ransoming of human bodies: Achilles' anger at Agamemnon is roused by a quarrel about who owns Briseis a girl Achilles has seized as a prize of war but whom Agamemnon takes as recompense for the loss of his own girl Chryceis. The story also hinges on the ownership of dead male bodies: the corpses, in turn, of Sarpedon, Patroclus, and Hector. War seems to produce its own kind of economy, a system of exchange: a live girl for a dead warrior, one life for another, or death for undying fame.

and death are facts of life: even when that violence and the threat of pain would be a mistake to see the Iliad as utes to the entertainment: it is exciting kill the sheep. and lions or wolves leap into the fold to fields, build homes, and watch their similes compare the violence on the poem brings out the terrible pity of pure military propaganda. At times, the to hear or read about slaughter. But it one level, the violence simply contribpeople are at peace, there is murder, sheep. But these similes may suggest peace, where people can plough the battlefield to the events of the world of peace, before the Greeks came." Some looks back with regret to "the days of people killed or enslaved, and the poet war: the city of Troy will be ruined, the The Iliad is a violent poem, and, on characters have choices to make. They cannot choose, like gods, to avoid death; but they can choose how they to fight and die soon, in this war, or go mother-that staying at Troy will mean other fighters, Achilles knows for surecan always be replaced but "a man's death for glory: "Nothing is worth my faced by all these warriors. fore a starker version of the decision home and live a little longer-are thererisk their own deaths. Achilles' choiceslliad are conscious that in fighting they his death. But all the warriors of the thanks to the goddess Thetis, his life cannot be won back." Unlike the life," he declares, since prizes of honor heroic code, and its system of trading Achilles begins to question the whole may seem inadequate. After Agamemthat the exchange of honor for death die. The poem itself acknowledges has treated him dishonorably going into battle; a deep tenderness says goodbye to his tearful wife before touching moments comes as Hector or vengeance but to protect his wife Trojans as fully human as the Greeks. The Trojan hero, Hector, seems to and their infant son. One of the most er in the poem, fighting not for honor Fascinatingly, the Iliad makes the e most likeable charac-> connects Hector and his family-in tions of the Greeks with their female again; the baby is right to be frightdevoted father will never see his son heartwarming and chilling, since we baby will not be scared as he swings and Hector takes off the helmet so the helmet. The parents laugh together, frightened at seeing his father in his down to kiss his son, the child screams prisoners of war. As Hector reaches contrast to the more shallow associatorious Greeks. headlong from the city walls by the vicened, since he will soon be swung know-and his wife knows-that this him in his arms. The moment is both immortal gods. The gods play an importeach weeping for those they have lost. Achilles to return his son's body, and son Hector. Priam goes to plead with hero's death or dishonor. We are told at times intervening to cause or prevent a ant role in the action of the poem, some but between the humans and the the two enemies end up sitting together, ing encounter, between Priam, king of Troy, and Achilles, who has killed his lliad is not between Greek and Trojan, umans, even those who kill each other he experience of grief is common to all The Iliad culminates in an astonishwar. The major contrast drawn by the

Within the narrow world of the battlefield, Homer's vividly imagined

Achilles (left) slays Hector. From a red-figured volute-krater (a large ceramic wine decanter), ca. 500-480 B.C.E

of human experience that are otherwise incomprehensible. vide a way of talking about the elements action work together, and the gods proacter. Rather, human action and divine never forced by gods to act out of chargods or by fate. Human characters are ters into puppets, controlled only by the gods does not turn the human characwill was done." But the presence of the action of the poem happened "as Zeus les' rage and the will of Zeus: the whole between all the deaths caused by Achilthe beginning that there is a connection suffering as a kind of power, which the gods themselves cannot achieve. bleak but inspiring account of human keep on living. The Iliad provides a ity to endure unendurable loss and again, only when he realizes that all clus. His rage can end, and he can eat have to have "hearts of iron," the abilhumans, even the greatest warriors, Achilles in his rage refuses to accept play little or no part in any god's life. dishonor, loss, and pain-things that the loss of his dearest friend, Patrothe horror of loss: loss of honor, and before death humans have to face grief, refuse to bow to Agamemnon. But on as some Greek chieftains sometimes recognize the authority of Zeus, just Olympus, all quarrel sometimes the lesser gods refuse to hierarchy, just as there are on earth: of the gods, there are conflicts about about human life in war. In the world ticularly aware of what is distinctive gods-like the similes-makes us parmportant fact about all the warriors in Moreover, the presence of the Iliad is that they die. Moreover, drinking, not death. The most family and a home.

THE ODYSSEY

entirety in this anthology, has a special place in the study of world literature since it deals explicitly with the rela-The Odyssey, which is included in its details and on the human need for a magic but also focuses on domestic varied tale, which includes fantasy and past twenty years. It is a gripping and of Odysseus's homecoming from Troy from which he has been absent for the tracing his reclamation of a household worst enemies may lie inside his own household. The poem tells the story course of a long journey, where the he encounters-not in war, but in the Greek man, and the other cultures that tionships between one westerner, a depth and in detail, the complex relatural identity. The poem shows us, in and memory in the formation of culstudent of world literature must confront, including the place of literature the time, and deals with issues that any the world as it was known to Greeks at It is about a journey that spans most of know and those who are strange to us. tionship between the kind of people we for many years. homes from which they had been absent faced further danger in the long voyage Trojan War, showing how the Greeks back to Greece, and in their return to ferent but complementary vision of the aftermath. The Odyssey creates a difsions to the actual fall of Troy, and its repeating anything that had been since it seems deliberately to avoid from the earlier poem—including alluimportant details that had been absent included in the Iliad, and fills in many was probably produced a little later The Odyssey is set after the Iliad, and poem shows us what those skills might through the figure of Odysseus the those needed on the battlefield, and of the Iliad. The journey from war to peace requires different skills of the poem, in a way that no single man, Odysseus himself, is the center poem's subject-is andra ("man"). One of the Odyssey-our first clue to the hero, not even Achilles, is the center In the Greek original, the first word from

be. He has strength and physical courconnects the name Odysseus with the how difficult or unexpected. He has ning hero" is the cleverest of those who age, but he also has brains: "the cunall, he has the will to go home, and to and self-restraint required to bide his by the god Poseidon. He has the patience Greek word for "to be angry" or "hate" to endure and to inflict pain without psychological strength, an ability both deal with any eventuality, no matter ble, a "man of many turns," able to fought at Troy. He is famously adaptarestore his home to its proper order. It is reveal himself to his household. Most of (odyssomai): Odysseus is the man hated flinching; more than once, the poem tance at the target of his choice. but the bow, which shoots from a disweapon is not the sword or the spear no accident that Odysseus's favorite time until the moment comes for him to sweet-singing Sirens, the monster Scylla, non-human cultures. Odysseus spends shepherd-giants, the Cyclopes, and he years on the luxurious island of the tinct worlds and cultures, including Odyssey shows us a multitude of dison the battlefield of Troy, and focused ife. The Iliad is set almost exclusively ball with her girlfriends, while daywho is out to do laundry and play the queen, and the princess, Nausicaa, son long, and where he meets the king, Phaeacia, where fruits flourish all seais welcomed in the magical land of He is almost killed on the island of the witch Circe, who can turn men to pigs. tempting, delicious cows, and of the barks on the island of the sun, with its and the Lotus-eaters; and he disemnymph Calypso; he encounters the tocratic male warriors. By contrast, the on the relationships between the aristhe poem has a particular interest in dreaming about her future husband. "Man" is also the subject of the cultures and ways of simply because they are ours. Similarly both the exotic and the ordinary. The many cultures of the poem include who gives him shelter. In showing muland of the poor as well as the richas his insecure young son Telemachus see the lives of women as well as men; of old Laertes Odysseus's father, as well with the poor island of Ithaca Odysseus's embroidery and her narcotics, contrasts glimpses of several distinct ways of life. ourselves. to think about how we ought to behave from him, the Homeric poem invites us tiple encounters between the Greek including the old nurse who washes horses or plentiful crops. In Ithaca, we hero and people who are very different Odysseus and the pig-keeper Eumaeus aus and his recovered wite, the beautiful, sophisticated Helen, with her fancy toward people who are not the same as The rich land of Sparta, ruled by Menenomeland, which is too stony to raise Even in the Greek world, we are given good society will accommodate the cerned with the laws of hospitality Calypso, are almost too welcoming: many strange peoples in the course of wandering guest. Odysseus encounters may vary in other respects, but any civilized society in this poem. Cultures pitality is the fundamental criterion for which in Greek is xenia a word that they are better than any other, but people and our own place, not because damental desire we feel for our own go back. This poem deals with the funhome; but, movingly, he still wants to island is more lush than his own stony ful than his own wife and that her edges that Calypso is far more beautihe longs to go home. Odysseus acknowlbed, and keeps him there even when she invites him into her home and her his wanderings. Some, like the goddess guests and hosts, and between strancovers the whole relationship between zers and those who take them in. Hos-The Odyssey is particularly con-> by denying his own name, calling himself "Noman." The journey home has to whose name suggests "Much-named"__ But Odysseus defeats Polyphemus are always concerned that their names be remembered in times to come. home. Heroes in battle, in the Iliad, Odysseus needs to survive the journey tinctive, and unheroic, are the skills encounter is a reminder of how disand feeding his guests, the Cyclops wants to eat them for dinner. This eyed Cyclops, Polyphemus, is a groof the Phaeacians. The monstrous one-Phaeacian hosts: instead of welcoming resque counterpart to the ing his life over in the hospitable land Odysseus rejects the possibility of start good honor and killing in war. human feelings over grand tales of details of human relationships and tion lies in the way it values the little But a great deal of the Odyssey's attraccousins, and kinsmen in the surroundactivities-short journeys to visit uncles. inconsequential, and even unheroic. ing neighborhood-may seem oddly the first four books of Telemachus to his father's friends. The account in on the theme of hospitality in the visits when they kill the cattle of the Sun, that Odysseus's son, Telemachus, pays den to touch. We see further variations which they have been expressly forbidto transgress the laws of hospitality, as trump even Odysseus's heroic identity. At times, Odysseus's own men seem ing his property. There are repeated references in the Odyssey to the nighthomecoming of Agamemnon, who came back from Troy only to be killed in his devouring his food and drink, and ruinare abusing his unwitting hospitality, in have seized control of his house and stranger in his own home. The suitors when Odysseus arrives back as a his absence, by courting his wife, are double of Odysseus's return: Hospitality is tested most severely the poem that Aegisthus is hated by the her lover, Aegisthus. Zeus, the king o killing the adulterous murderer. ds, and he praises Agamemnon's estes, who avenges his father's death gods, insists at the beginning world and constantly to redefine his own turns," able to see the multiplicity of the in which Odysseus is a "man of many stories is one of the most important ways comes from. Controlling and multiplying stories about who he is and where he place in it. back on Ithaca, he tells a series of false derings to the Phaeacians, and, once storytellers; he himself narrates his wanout the poem, Odysseus has a particuself-control in his willingness to suppress larly close affinity with poets and Polyphemus, he must show enormous meets-and, as in the encounter with disguises to test the loyalty of those he his identity, at least temporarily. Throughhis presence in Ithaca; he uses his many comes up with multiple tales to explain reaching a geographic location. Odysseus require several stages, beyond merely beggar. The act of homecoming seems to home as a stranger, disguised as a poor journey is only half complete. He arrives Odysseus is back home in Ithaca. But his half of the poem, beginning at book 13, part of the whole poem. In the second homeland, Ithaca, occupy only a short that the wanderings of Odysseus, across the sea from Troy back to his stony Greek First-time readers may be surprised perfect match for her trickster husband servants, his son, his father, and—most memorably—his wife Penelops. He tests her right away. But she shows herself a with each loyal member of his home: his her loyalty by refusing to reveal himself to has to win the peace by reconnecting who make up his household. Odysseus mastery of weapons (such as the strongtests of his own. He must show his Odysseus passes a series of tests, and gets bow) and his knowledge of the people In the course of his homecoming, and then to Penelope-a shift that sugsailors saved from drowning, "glad / To could be moved. The immovable an imposter, he would think the bed it is bedtime, she asks the servant to putting him to yet another test. When be alive and set foot on dry land." The ing, and she, clinging to him, are like marriage. When they talk in the bed through the house; if Odysseus were bring out the bed-the bed that, as gests the dynamic intimacy between Penelope have come home; he, weepthat now, at last, both Odysseus and that night after sex, a simile suggests nence of Penelope and Odysseus's formed from a tree growing right only Odysseus himself could know, is husband and wite. image first seems to apply to Odysseus, of course, an image for the permaa feminized version of epic-a heroic reading, and worth rereading over and progress. As the first word indicates, a morality tale; or as a pilgrim's a meditation on cultural difference; as as a work of primitive anthropology; as archy; as an account of Greek identity; a fantasy about fathers, sons, and patribut a journey home; as a love story; as story focused not on men fighting wars, be enjoyed on any number of levels: as travellers' tales, magic, military exploits, romance, folklore, heroism, mystery, ate with many other types of literature: hero, the Odyssey is enjoyable on first as multilayered and intelligent as its humanity. An extraordinarily rich work, and family drama. It is a text that can this is a poem about "man": about The Odyssey has elements we associ

From The Iliad<sup>1</sup>

[The Rage of Achilles

воок і

And left their bodies to rot as feasts Black and murderous, that cost the Greeks For dogs and birds, as Zeus' will was done Of heroes into Hades' dark, Incalculable pain, pitched countless souls Begin with the clash between Sing; Goddess,2 Achilles' rage,

At each other's throats? Which of the immortals set these two

The Greek warlord—and godlike Achilles.

Agamemnon—

And the soldiers were dying of it. Struck the Greek camp with plague, By the warlord. Agamemnon had dishonored Chryses, Apollo's priest, so the god Zeus' son and Leto's, offended

The commanders, Atreus' two sons: To the entire Greek army, but especially On a golden staff, he made a formal plea Displaying Apollo's sacral ribbons Hauling a fortune for his daughter's ransom. Had come to the Greek beachhead camp Chryses

Lord Apollo, who deals death from afar. This ransom out of respect for Zeus' son, But give me my daughter back and accept Of Priam's city<sup>4</sup> and a safe return home. May the gods on Olympus grant you plunder "Sons of Atreus and Greek heroes all:

A murmur rippled through the ranks: But Agamemnon was not pleased "Respect the priest and take the ransom." And dismissed Chryses with a rough speech:

Skulking around now or sneaking back later. "Don't let me ever catch you, old man, by these ships again,

 Translated by Stanley Lombardo.
 The Muse, inspiration for epic poetry.
 Chryses is from the town of Chryse near when they sacked Thebes (see below) and had Troy. The Greeks had captured his daughter given her to Agamemnon as his share of the posed to be the home of the gods. mountain in northern Greece that was sup-4. Troy; Priam is its king. Olympus is the

You would draw them aside and calm them Any of my husband's brothers or sisters, And I have never had an unkind word from you. Who led me to Troy. I should have died first. Or be my friend. Everyone shudders at me." In all wide Troy who will pity me And my heart is heavy, because there is no one left And so I weep for you and for myself, With your gentle heart and gentle words. Or his mother—my father-in-law was kind always— If anyone in the house ever taunted me, Since I went away and left my home This is now the twentieth year

And the people's moan came in over her voice

Then the old man, Priam, spoke to his people

And have no fear of an Argive ambush. Until the twelfth day should dawn." He gave his word he would not trouble us When Achilles sent me from the black ships "Men of Troy, start bringing wood to the city,

And all in tears lifted the body high He spoke, and they yoked oxen and mules Onto the bier, and threw on the fire They brought out their brave Hector When the tenth dawn showed her mortal light For nine days they hauled in loads of timber. To wagons, and gathered outside the city.

Light blossomed like roses in the eastern sky

And when all of Troy was assembled there And placed them in a golden casket, and laid it In the house of Priam, Zeus' cherished king To the city and assembled for a glorious feast When the tomb was built, they all returned Quickly, with lookouts posted all around A mantle of stones. They built the tomb In the hollow of the grave, and heaped above it His white bones, their cheeks flowered with tears Hector's brothers and friends collected They drowned the last flames with glinting wine. The people gathered around Hector's pyre In case the Greeks should attack early. They wrapped the bones in soft purple robes

That was the funeral of Hector, breaker of horses

840 83.5

855 850

After he plundered Troy's sacred heights.

Speak

The wanderer, blown off course time and again

Of the cunning hero,3

summery blance through pareties

The Odyssey

As he struggled to survive and bring his men home And that god snuffed out their day of return Of all the cities he saw, the minds he grasped, When they ate the oxen of Hyperion the Sun. The fools—destroyed by their own recklessness But could not save them, hard as he tried— The suffering deep in his heart at sea

Speak, Immortal One, 5
And tell the tale once more in our time. Of these things,

0.1

The seasons rolled by, and the year came And beautiful—was clinging to him Still longed to return to his home and his wite Were safely back home. Only Odysseus At least those who had survived the war and the sea-In which the gods spun the thread In her caverns and yearned to possess him By now, all the others who had fought at Troy-The nymph Calyps ( a powerful goddess—

Until he finally reached his own native land All the gods pitied him, except Poseidon,7 Who stormed against the godlike hero Even with his dear ones around him. I hough not even there did his troubles end, For Odysseus to return home to Ithaca,

To receive a grand sacrifice of rams and bulls Some near the sunset, some near the sunrise-I hose burnished people at the ends of the earth-But Poseidon was away now, among the Ethiopians of memory, an important one in the poem, and 2. In the original, the first word is andra reminds us that memory is, in Greek myth, the sing, Muse." Lombardo emphasizes the theme (man)-translated here as "hero"-and the Translated by Stanley Lombardo.

lines later. 3. Odysseus, who is not named until several mother of the Muses.

cattle of the sun will be told in book 12. sun. The story of how Odysseus's men ate the the Olympians. He was associated with the one of the generation of gods that preceded 4. Hyperion was, in Greek mythology, a Titan, holds up the sky; her name connotes "hiding" or "secrecy."

7. God of the sea, brother of Zeus. 6. Goddess, daughter of the Titan Atlas, who The Muse.

No other mortal has a mind like his, or offers Daughter. How could I forget godlike Odysseus?

"Quite a little speech you've let slip through your teeth

There he sat, enjoying the feast.

Whom Agamemnon's son, Orestes, had killed:9 And the Father of Gods and Men was speaking. Were assembled in the halls of Olympian Zeus,8 He couldn't stop thinking about Aegist The other gods

Or Agamemnon's son, Orestes, would pay him back Knowing it meant disaster-because we did warn him, Meant nothing to Aegisthus. Now he's paid in full." Hermes told him all that, but his good advice Sent our messenger, quicksilver Hermes, For their troubles, when their own witlessness "Mortals! They are always blaming the gods When he came of age and wanted his inheritance To tell him not to kill the man and marry his wife, Lawful wife and murders the man on his return Take Aegisthus now. He marries Agamemnon's Causes them more than they were destined for

45

Athena<sup>2</sup> glared at him with her owl-grey eyes

That man got the death he richly deserved Into torgetting Ithaca. But Odysseus, The tall pillars that keep earth and heaven apart All the depths of the sea and who supports The daughter of Atlas, whose dread mind knows A wooded isle that is home to a goddess, On an island that lies in the center of the sea, So long, separated from his dear ones, That discerning, ill-fated man. He's suffered But it's Odysseus I'm worried about, And so perish all who would do the same. "Yes, O our Father who art most high— At Troy? Why is Odysseus so odious, 3 Zeus?" Sweet-talking him constantly, trying to charm him His daughter detains the poor man in his griet, Please you with sacrifices beside the Greek ships Never think of him, Olympian. Didn't Odysseus From his land, simply wants to die. And yet you Longing to see even the smoke curling up

Zeus in his thunderhead had an answer for her:

King of the gods.

the war, Aegisthus and Clytemnestra killed him in his bath. Orestes, Agamemnon's son, armies in the Trojan War. In his ten-year absence, his wife, Clytemnestra, took a lover, Agamemnon was the leader of the Greek avenged his father by killing his killers. Other Aegisthus; when Agamemnon returned from > perhaps deliberately, she is not named here. more important in the story than Aegisthus; lus (in his Oresteia plays), make Clytemnestra versions of the myth, including that of Aeschy-

Messenger god

original Greek Messenger god.
 Goddess of wisdom, who favors Odysseus.
 There is a pun on Odysseus's name in the

> From his native land. But come now, Put aside his anger. He can't hold out alone Ever since, not killing him, but keeping him away The Earthshaker's has been after Odysseus After mating with Poseidon in a scalloped sea-cave.4 Daughter of Phorcys, lord of the barren brine, Nearly a god. The nymph Thoösa bore him, Polyphemus, the strongest of all the Cyclopes, But Poseidon is stiff and cold with anger Sacrifice like him to the deathless gods in heaven Against the will of all the immortals." Because Odysseus blinded his son, the Cyclops To bring Odysseus home. Poseidon will have to Let's all put our heads together and find a way

And Athena, the owl-eyed goddess, replied:

And win for himself a name among men." So he can make inquiries about his father's return I'll escort him to Sparta and the sands of Pylos They have been butchering his flocks and herds And rebuke the whole lot of his mother's suitors. Have him call an assembly of the long-haired Greeks I myself will go to Ithaca That long-suffering Odysseus gets to go home. To tell that nymph of our firm resolve To the island of Ogygia without delay We should send Hermes, our quicksilver herald, Odysseus to return to his home, If the blessed gods really do want "Father Zeus, whose power is supreme, To put some spirit into his son—

55

50

Athena spoke, and she bound on her feet And her eyes rested on the arrogant suitors. Of Odysseus' outer porch. Holding her spear, She shot down from the peaks of Olympus Bronze-tipped and massive, that the Daughter uses The beautiful sandals, golden, immortal, To Ithaca, where she stood on the threshold To level battalions of heroes in her wrath. On a puff of wind. And she took the spear That carry her over landscape and seascape he looked like Mentes, the Taphian captain is a minor sea god.

5. The Earthshaker is Poseidon, who had 4. The Cyclopes are one-eyed giants. Phorcys

he a ma

power over earthquakes.
6. Friend of Odysseus.

They were playing dice in the courtyard,
Enjoying themselves, seated on the hides of oxen
They themselves had slaughtered. They were attended
By heralds and servants, some of whom were busy
Blending water and wine in large mixing bowls,
Others wiping down the tables with sponges
And dishing out enormous servings of meat.

115

elemachus spotted her first.

He was sitting with the suitors, nursing
His heart's sorrow, picturing in his mind
His noble father, imagining he had returned
And scattered the suitors, and that he himself,
Telemachus, was respected at last.
Such were his reveries as he sat with the suitors.
And then he saw Athena.

125

He went straight to the porch Indignant that a guest had been made to wait so long. Going up to her he grasped her right hand in his And took her spear, and his words had wings:

"Greetings, tranger ou are welcome here.

After you've had dinner, you can tell us what you need."

135

Telemachus spoke, and Pallas Athena
Followed him into the high-roofed hall.
When they were inside he placed her spear
In a polished rack beside a great column
Where the spears of Odysseus stood in a row.
Then he covered a beautifully wrought chair
With a linen cloth and had her sit on it
With a stool under her feet. He drew up
An intricately painted bench for himself
And arranged their seats apart from the suitors
So that his guest would not lose his apperite

140

In their noisy and uncouth company—
And so he could inquire about his absent father.
A maid poured water from a silver pitcher

A maid poured water from a silver pitcher

A maid poured water from a silver pitcher Into a golden basin for them to wash their hands And then set up a polished table nearby. Another serving woman, grave and dignified, Set out bread and generous helpings From the other dishes she had. A carver set down Cuts of meat by the platter and golden cups. Then a herald came by and poured them wine.

150

Now the suitors swaggered in. They sat down In rows on benches and chairs. Heralds Poured water over their hands, maidservants Brought around bread in baskets, and young men Filled mixing bowls to the brim with wine.

The suitors helped themselves to all this plenty, And when they had their fill of food and drink, They turned their attention to the other delights, Dancing and song, that round out a feast. A healt handed a beautiful zither Tochemius who sang for the suitors, Though against his will. Sweeping the strings He struck up a song. And Telemachus, Putting his head close to Pallas Athena's So the others wouldn't hear, said this to her:

165

120

Who have come to our house over the years?" An old friend of my father's, one of the many Is this your first visit here, or are you Brought you here? How did your sailors Who are you, and where do you come from? The day has long passed when he's coming home. When some traveler tells us he's on his way home But he's met a bad end, and it's no comfort to us On some distant shore, or still churn in the waves Whose white bones lie rotting in the rain Without paying anything—the stores of a man Since they are eating another man's stores It's easy for them to enjoy the harper's song, "Please don't take offense if I speak my mind And tell me this, too. I'd like to know, don't imagine you came here on foot Guide you to Ithaca, and how large is your crew? Who are your parents? What kind of ship But tell me this, and tell me the truth: hey would pray for more foot speed they ever saw him make landing on Ithaca or fancy clothes.

180

175

170

Athena's seagrey eyes glinted as she said:

145

"I'll tell you nothing but the unvarnished truth."

I am Mentes son of Anchialus, and proud of it.

I am also captain of the seafaring Taphians.

I just pulled in with my ship and my crew,
Sailing the deep purple to foreign ports.

We're on our way to Cyprus with a cargo of iron
To trade for copper. My ship is standing
Offshore of wild country away from the city,
In Rheithron harbor under Neion's woods.

You and I have ties of hospitality,
Just as our fathers did, from a long way back.

Go and ask old Laertes." They say he never Comes to town any more, lives out in the country,

200

195

190

185

Odysseus's father

Because they say your father has returned, No way in the world. No, he's alive all right. He's not dead, though, not godlike Odysseus, the sea, held captive by sava him back, detained on son Hold him. He knows every trick there is Odysseus will not be gone much longer Put it in my heart and as I think it will be, And now I will prophesy for you, as the gods Since then, we haven't seen each other at all." We used to spend quite a bit of time together Especially in the head and those beautiful eyes You bear a striking resemblance to him, Tall as you are, are you Odysseus' son? But now tell me this, and I want the truth: And will think of some way to come home. From his native land, not even if iron chains Though I am no soothsayer or reader of birds Before he sailed for Troy with the Argive fleet.

Nother nutrustworthy

Telemachus took a deep breath and said:

"You want the truth, and I will give it to you Of a man fortunate enough to grow old at home. My mother says that Odysseus is my father. They say I was born from-since you want to know." But it's the man with the most dismal fate of all. His own begetting. If I had my way, I'd be the son don't know this myself. No one witnesses

Athena's seagrey eyes glinted as she said:

Will go on, since Penelope has borne a son like you What kind of a party is this? What's the occasion: But there is one other thing I want you to tell me. "Well, the gods have made sure your family name Would be outraged if he saw this behavior." All through the house. Any decent man Some kind of banquet? A wedding feast? It's no neighborly potluck, that's for sure The way this rowdy crowd is carrying on

Telemachus breathed in the salt air and said:

"Since you ask me these questions as my guest—

Without a trace. He's vanished, gone, and left me And great honor would have passed on to to son.
But now the whirlwinds have snatched him away When they whisked him off the face of the earth Wealthy and fine, when its master was still home. Pain and sorrow. And he's not the only cause But the gods frowned and changed all that This, no doubt, was once a perfect house, Jut of house and home, and will kill me someday." have to grieve. The gods have given me other trials re courting my mother and ruining our house it can't stop it either. They are eati le refuses to make a marriage she hates ne entire Greek army would have buried his friends' arms after winding up the war tor him so much if he were dead

215

220

And Pallas Athena, with a flash of anger:

Right here in his halls, or doesn't. But it's on the knees of the gods now Whether he comes home and pays them back Gave him some, because he loved him dearly. They wouldn't live long enough to get married! Would not give him any, but my father On his way back from Ephyre. Odysseus With a helmet and shield and a pair of spears, That's the Odysseus I want the suitors to meet Ilus, out of fear of the gods' anger, For some deadly poison for his arrowheads. Had sailed there to ask Mermerus' son, Ilus, Drinking and enjoying himself in our house Just as he was when I saw him first, If only he would come through that door now "Damn them! You really do need Odysseus back ust let him lay his hands on these mangy dogs!

235

And my advice for you, if you will take it, And the large dowry that should go with his daughter. Your mother—if in her heart she wants to marry— Now pay attention and listen to what I'm saying. To find a way to drive them out of your house. Tomorrow you call an assembly and make a speech soes back to her powerful father's house. The suitors you order to scatter, each to his own. To these heroes, with the gods as witnesses. fer kinfolk and he can arrange the marriage. So it's up to you

CONTROL SON

285

290

Then go over to Sparta and red-haired Menelaus.8 Sail to Pylos first and ask godly Nestor, A rumor from Zeus, which is how news travels best. Someone may tell you something, or you may hear And go make inquiries about your long-absent father Is to launch your best ship, with twenty oarsmen, Your father deserves. Then marry off your mother Build him a barrow and celebrate the funeral Then come home yourself to your ancestral land, If you hear he's dead, among the living no more, You can grit your teeth and hold out one more year And Telemachus, in his clear-headed way: And well-built you are—so you will leave a good name. The shrewd traitor who murdered his father? Throughout the world when he killed Aegisthus. Haven't you heard how Orestes won glory Acting like a child. You've outgrown that now Or by setting a trap. You've got to stop After you've done all that, think up some way If you hear your father's alive and on his way home He was the last home of all the bronzeclad Greeks. You've got a job to do. Remember what I said." Who are no doubt wondering what's taking me so long. Well, I'm off to my ship and my men, You have to be aggressive, strong—look at how big To kill the suitors in your house either openly 300 320 315 310 305

"My dear guest, you speak to me as kindly As a father to his son. I will not forget your words. I know you're anxious to leave, but please stay So you can bathe and relax before returning To your ship, taking with you a costly gift, Something quite fine, a keepsake from me, The sort of thing a host gives to his guest."

325

330

And Athena, her eyes grey as saltwater:

"No, I really do want to get on with my journey. Whatever gift you feel moved to make, Give it to me on my way back home, Yes, something quite fine. It will get you as good."

335

specially, since I am the master of this house.

With these words the Grey-eyed One was gone, Flown up and away like a seabird. And as she went She put courage in Telemachus' heart And made him think of his father even more than before. Telemachus' mind soared. He knew it had been a god, And like a god himself he rejoined the suitors.

340

8. Brother of Agamemnon, husband of Helen, whose abduction by Paris caused the Trojan War.

And she wept as she addressed the brilliant harper: And when she had come among the suitors Not alone, two maids trailed behind-Of the hard journeys home that Pallas Athena Sipping their wine. But stop singing this one, Of gods and men. Sing one of those "Phemius, you know many other songs Grave handmaidens standing on either side Hiding her cheeks behind her silky veils, She stood shawled in light by a column She came down the steep stairs of her house-His song drifted upstairs, and Penelope, Ordained for the Greeks on their way back from Troy. Renowned in Argos and throughout all Hellas." For my husband, remembering him, a man This painful song that always tears at my heart. Io your enraptured audience as they sit To soothe human sorrows, songs of the exploits That supported the roof of the great house Wise daughter of Icarius, took it all in. To the great harper as he sang the tale They were sitting hushed in silence, listening am already sorrowful, constantly grieving 355 360 350 345

Spinning and weaving, and have the maids do theirs Who didn't come home. Many others perished. Odysseus was not the only man at Troy Of the Danaans:9 it's always the newest song Who gives what he wants to every man on earth. Singers are not responsible; Zeus is, And Telemachus said to her coolly: You'll just have to endure it and listen. An audience praises most. For yourself No one can blame Phemius for singing the doom You should go back upstairs and take care of your work, Mother, why begrudge our singer Entertaining us as he thinks best? men, but for me 375 370 365

Penelope was stunned and turned to go, Her son's masterful words pressed to her heart. She went up the stairs to her room with her women And wept for Odysseus, her beloved husband, Until grey-eyed Athena cast sleep on her eyelids.

380

Danaans are Greeks, Homer does not use a general term for the Greeks, instead referring to three Greek tribes: Danaans, Argives, and Achaeans.

Broke into an uproar, each of them praying All through the shadowy halls the suitors To lie in bed with her. Telemachus cut them short:

385

"Suitors of my mother—you arrogant pigs— For now, we're at a feast. No shouting, please! A singer like this, with a voice like a god's. For one man to be eaten out of house and home But if it seems better and more profitable In each others' houses, use up your own stockpiles. To get out of my house. Fix yourselves feasts So that I can tell all of you in broad daylight But in the morning we will sit in the meeting ground There's nothing finer than hearing Here in my house. With no compensation." That Zeus grant me requital: Death for you For my part, I will pray to the gods eternal Without compensation—then eat away!

And marveled at how boldly he had spoken to them. Thus Telemachus. And they all bit their lips Then Antinous, son of Eupeithes, replied:

Are teaching you how to be a bold public speaker. May the son of Cronus' never make you king Here on Ithaca, even if it is your birthright." "Well, Telemachus, it seems the gods, no less,

And Telemachus, taking in a breath:

410

"It may make you angry, Antinous, And you're held in great honor yourself. Bu You think this is the worst fate a man can have? If Zeus granted me this—if he made me king. But I'll tell you something. I wouldn't mind a bit lt's not so bad to be king. Your house grows rich ould get to be king, now that Odysseus is dead here are many other lords on seawashed and of the servants that Odysseus let

But you keep your property and rule your house, Which man of Greece will rule this island. From you by force, not while men live in Ithaca. And may no man ever come to wrest them away But I want to ask you, sir, about your visitor.

Then Eurymachus, Polybus' son, responded

"It's on the knees of the gods, Telemachus,

To be known. Yet by his looks he was no tramp." Or was he here on business of his own? Does he call home, where are his ancestral fields? He sure up and left in a hurry, wouldn't stay Did he bring news of your father's coming Where did he come from, what port

430

And Telemachus, with a sharp response

390

And captain of the seafaring Taphians." Or any prophecy my mother may have gotten "Eurymachus, my father is not coming home. He says he is Mentes, son of Anchialus My guest was a friend of my father's from Taphos From a seer she has summoned up to the house I no longer trust any news that may come,

440

435

Thus Telemachus. But in his heart he knew lt was an immortal

And now

Singing and dancing until the twilight hour. Then one by one went to their own houses to rest. The young men plunged into their entertainment They were still at it when the evening grew dark,

445

Of all the women, she loved Telemachus the most And drew the bolt home with the strap. Folded it and smoothed it and hung it on a peg In the hands of the wise old woman, and she the doors to his room and sat on his bed. And had nursed him as a baby. Now she bore Because he would rather avoid his wife's wrath. His wedded wife, but he never slept with her When she was still a girl. He paid twenty oxen And honored her in his house as he honored And Peisenor's grandaughter. Long ago, Went true-heartes Eurycleia, laughter of Ops And with him, bearing blazing torches, Built high and with a surrounding view. Telemachus' room was off the beautiful courtyard Laertes had bought her for a small fortune There he went to his bed, his mind teeming ulied the door shut by its silver handle, te pulled off his soft tunic and laid it eside the corded bed. Then she left the room plazing torches as Telemachus opened

460

455

450

Lay wrapped in a fleece all the night through, Pondering the journey Athena had shown him There Telemachus fidway between Itheca and rugged Samos. Stells is its name, not very big, stells is its name, not very big, out it has a harbor with outlets on either side where a ship can lie. There the suitors waited.

905

BOOK V

Left (Tithonus' in her rose-shadowed bed, Then shook the morning into flakes of fire.

Light flooded the halls of Olympus Where Zeus, high Lord of Thunder, Sat with the other gods, listening to Athena Reel off the tale of Odysseus' woes. It galled her that he was still in Calypso's cave:

"Zeus, my father—and all you blessed immortals—Kings might as well no longer be gentle and kind Or understand the correct order of things. They might as well be tyrannical butchers For all that any of Odysseus' people For all that any of Odysseus' people Remember him, a godly king as kind as a father. No, he's still languishing on that island, detained Against his will by that nymph Calypso, No way in the world for him to get back to his land. His ships are all lost, he has no crew left To row him across the sea's crawling back. And now the islanders are plotting to kill his son As he heads back home. He went for news of his father To sandy Pylos and white-bricked Sparta."

Storm Cloud Zeus had an answer for her:

"Quite a little speech you've let slip through your teeth Daughter. But wasn't this exactly your plan So that Odysseus would make them pay for it later? You know how to get Telemachus Back to Ithaca and out of harm's way With his mother's suitors sailing in a step behind."

Zeus turned then to his son Hermes and said:

"Hermes, you've been our messenger before. Go tell that ringleted nymph it is my will To let that patient man Odysseus go home. Not with an escort, mind you, human or divine, Dawn's lover, a mortal man whom she made immortal (though not ageless) and brought to live with her in the sky.

But on a rickety raft—tribulation at sea—
Until on the twentieth day he comes to Schería
In the land of the Phaeacians, our distant relatives,
Who will treat Odysseus as if he were a god
And take him on a ship to his own native land
With gifts of bronze and clothing and gold,
More than he ever would have taken back from Troy
Had he come home safely with his share of the loot.
That's how he's destined to see his dear ones again
And return to his high-gabled Ithacan home."

Thus Zeus, and the quicksilver messenger
Laced on his feet the beautiful sandals,
Golden, immortal, that carry him over
Landscape and seascape on a puff of wind.
And he picked up the wand he uses to charm
Mortal eyes to sleep and make sleepers awake.

45

50

Holding this wand the tough quicksilver god Took off, bounded onto Pieria And dove through the ether down to the sea,

Skimming the waves like a cormorant,
The bird that patrols the saltwater billows
Hunting for fish, seaspume on its plumage,

S

Hermes flying low and planing the whitecaps

Of split cedar and arbor vitae5 burning A fire blazed on the hearth, and the smell Enraptured at the sight. Quicksilver Hermes Crossing channels as they meandered through meadows Four separate springs flowed with clear water, criss-Horned owls and larks and slender-throated shorebirds Alder and poplar and fragrant cypress. Around her cave the woodland was in bloom. As she wove at her loom with a golden shuttle She was seated inside, singing in a lovely voice Spread like incense across the whole island. Where Calypso lived. She was at home. On to dry land and proceeded to the cavern When he finally arrived at the distant island Lush with parsley and blossoming violets. The glossy green vine clustered with berries lendrils of ivy curled around the cave's mouth That screech like crows over the bright saltwater. He stepped from the violet-tinctured sea lt was enough to make even a visiting god Long-winged birds nested in the leaves, 60 72 70 65

5. An evergreen, whose name means "tree of life."

Took it all in, then turned and entered

Staring out to sea with hollow, salt-rimmed eyes.	As ever those days, honing his heart's sorrow,	Odysseus was sitting on the shore,	But Hermes didn't find the great hero inside.	Even those whose homes are in outlying districts.	The immortals have ways of recognizing each other,	Calvpso knew him at sight.	THE VASE CAVE:
	85					80

Politely, as she seated him on a lacquered chair: Calypso, sleek and haloed, questioned Hermes

And made the speech she was waiting for:	Then settled back from dinner with heart content	The quicksilver messenger ate and drank his fill,	With ambrosia and mixed a bowl of rosy nectar. <sup>6</sup>	The goddess spoke, and then set a table	What you want, and I'll oblige you if I can."	The honor of this unexpected visit? Tell me	"My dear Hermes, to what do I owe
	2
	95					90

Of deserted sea? Not a single city in sight And none of us gods can oppose his will. Well, I'll tell you exactly why. Remember, you asked "You ask me, goddess to god, why I have come. Of the whole lot who fought around Priam's city He says you have here the most woebegone hero But you know how it is: Zeus has the aegis, Where you can get a decent sacrifice from men. Zeus ordered me to come here; I didn't want to. Who would want to cross this endless stretch

And she swamped them with hurricane winds and waves. And return to his high-gabled Ithacan home." Anyway, Zeus wants you to send him back home. Now. Drifted along until he was washed up here. His entire crew was wiped out, and he It's his destiny to see his dear ones again The man's not fated to rot here far from his friends.

But on the way back they offended Athena,

For nine years, sacked it in the tenth, and started home.

Words flew from her mouth like screaming hawks: He finished, and the nymph's aura stiffened.

115

110

6. Magic food of the gods.
7. This passage is unusual in ascribing the deaths of Odysseus's companions to Athena, not Poseidon. In most versions of the myth, the Greeks offended Athena during the sack of the city, by various war crimes including the rape of the prophetess Cassandra by the Greek hero Ajax, in Athena's temple.

> So all right, he can go, if it's an order from above, Off on the sterile sea. How I don't know. And none of us gods can oppose his will. But you said it, Hermes: Zeus has the aegis Slivering it with lightning on the wine-dark sea. Of the wreck Zeus made of his streamlined ship, Well, I was the one who saved his life, unprying him And now you gods are after me for having a man-When Demeter followed her heart and unbound Gold-throned, holy, gentle-shafted assault goddess Until Artemis finally shot him on Ortygia— You celestial layabouts gave her nothing but trouble When Dawn caressed Orion<sup>8</sup> with her rosy fingers, A mortal lover to her bed and sleeps with him. Persecuting any goddess who ever openly takes "You gods are the most jealous bastards in the universe-To get him back safely to his own native land." But I'll help him. I'll do everything I can. I don't have any oared ships or crewmen I loved him, I took care of him, I even told him From the spar he came floating here on, sole survivor To row him across the sea's broad back. I'd make him immortal and ageless all of his days. a late-summer field. Zeus was there taking notes executed the man with a cobalt lightning blast made love to him 140 135 130 125 120

The quicksilver messenger had one last thing to say:

100

Cross him and he'll really be rough on you later."	"Well send him off now and watch out for Zeus' temper.

145

With that the tough quicksilver god made his exit.

105

	She stood close to him and started to speak:
	Staring out to sea with hollow, salt-rimmed eyes.
	Days he spent sitting on the rocks by the breakers,
159	An unwilling lover mated to her eager embrace.
	He still slept with her at night in her cavern,
	The nymph had long since ceased to please.
	His life draining away in homesickness.
	His eyes were perpetually wet with tears now,
150	She found him sitting where the breakers rolled in.
	Zeus' message still ringing in her ears.
	Carypso composed nerself and went to Odysseus,

And pining away. I'm sending you home. "You poor man. You can stop grieving now Look, here's a bronze axe. Cut some long timbers

160

Dawn fell in love; the huntress goddess, 8. Orion was a human hunter with whom Demeter, goddess of the harvest, fell in love with Iasion (and in some versions had two sons by him); Zeus killed him with a thunderbolt.

Artemis, shot and killed him.

Something that will get you across the sea's misty spaces. And make yourself a raft fitted with topdecks,

Whose minds and powers are stronger than mine." If such is the will of the gods of high heaven, I'll clothe you well and send you a following wind Hearty provisions that will stave off hunger-and To bring you home safely to your own native land, I'll stock it with fresh water, food and red wine—

And shot back at her words fletched like arrows:

Unless you agree to swear a solemn oath You're not going to catch me setting foot on any raft Never make it across with a stiff wind from Zeus. Painful, hard sailing. Some well-rigged vessels Goddess, telling me to cross all that open sea on a raft, That you're not planning some new trouble for me."

175

That I'm not planning more trouble for you, Odysseus. Oath and the most awesome a god can swear-And the subterranean water of Styx1-the greatest All right. I swear by Earth and Heaven above How do you manage to say things like that? My heart is in the right place, Odysseus, For myself, if ever I were in such a fix. I'll put my mind to work for you as hard as I would 'Blasphemous, that's what you are—but nobody's fool!

She took a seat opposite godlike Odysseus Hermes had vacated, and the nymph set out for him And he sat down in the chair which moments before The two forms, human and divine, came to the cave With that the haloed goddess walked briskly away "Son of Laertes in the line of Zeus, my wily Odysseus, And when they had their fill of food and drink They helped themselves to as much as they wanted, And her maids served her ambrosia and nectar. Food and drink such as mortal men eat. And the man followed in the deity's footsteps. Right away? Now? Well, you still have my blessings Do you really want to go home to your beloved country Calypso spoke, an immortal radiance upon her:

200

195

Odysseus' eyes shone with weariness. He stiffened She touched him gently, and teased him a little: "I don't know what kind of send-off you have in mind Nor is it a cold lump of iron in my breast." Calypso's smile was like a shower of light.

180

River of the underworld.

n beauty, no matter how you measure it ou're destined to suffer before getting ou spend all your daylight hours yearning for nk of it, Odysseus! cannot compare with immortal." he's not my equal wanted to see her again. home,

210

165

Odysseus, always thinking, answered her this way

170

My heart aches for the day I return to my home Eternally young. Still, I want to go back. She's only human, and you are a goddess, For all her virtues, would pale beside you I'll weather it like the sea-bitten veteran I am. If some god hits me hard as I sail the deep purple, "Goddess and mistress, don't be angry with me in war and at sea. I can take more if I have to. l know very well that Penelope, and knows I've suffered and had my share of sorrows 220 215

Sweet love and lay side by side through the night. The sun set on his words, and the shadows darkened They went to a room deep in the cave, where they made

225

Dawn came early, touching the sky with rose 185

While Odysseus cut timber. What to do about sending Odysseus off? Calypso showed him where the trees grew tall Alder and poplar and silver fir, sky-topping trees To the island's far side where the trees grew tall She gave him a sharp adze, too, then led the way She handed him an axe, bronze, both edges honed With a golden belt and put a veil on her head. Shimmering in the light, cinched it at the waist And the nymph slipped on a long silver robe Odysseus put on a shirt and cloak, Then went back home, a glimmer in the woods, Long-seasoned and dry that would keep him afloat. The olive-wood haft felt good in his palms. 240 235

190

And he drilled the beams through, fit them up close Was the size Odysseus made his wide raft. Chisels into shape for a broad-bowed freighter About the size of a deck a master shipwright And hammered them together with joiners and pegs. He felled twenty trees, cut them to length, The glimmer returned—Calypso with an auger— Smoothed them skillfully and trued them to the line Working fast,

250

He fit upright ribs close-set in the decking And finished them with long facing planks. He built a mast and fit in a yardarm, And he made a rudder to steer her by. Then he wove a wicker-work barrier. To keep off the waves, plaiting it thick. Calypso brought him a large piece of cloth. Calypso brought him a large piece of that, too. He rigged up braces and halyards and lines, Then levered his craft down to the glittering sea.

255

260

Day four, and the job was finished.
Day five, and Calypso saw him off her island,
After she had bathed him and dressed him
In fragrant clothes. She filled up a skin
With wine that ran black, another large one
With water, and tucked into a duffel
With water, and tucked into a duffel
A generous supply of hearty provisions.
And she put a breeze at his back, gentle and warm.

265

Odysseus' heart sang as he spread sail to the wind, And he steered with the rudder, a master mariner Aboard his craft. Sleep never fell on his eyelids As he watched the Pleiades and slow-setting Boötes And the Bear (also known as the Wagon) That pivots in place and chases Orion And alone is aloof from the wash of Ocean.<sup>2</sup> Calypso, the glimmering goddess, had told him To sail with the stars of the Bear on his left.

275

280

270

And Poseidon saw him.

And on the eighteenth day the shadowy mountains Of the Phaeacians' land loomed on the horizon, To his eyes like a shield on the misty sea.

Seventeen days he sailed the deep water,

From the far Solymi Mountains The Lord of Earthquake, returning from Ethiopia, Saw him, an image in his mind bobbing on the sea. Angrier than ever, he shook his head And cursed to himself:

"Damn it all, the gods Must have changed their minds about Odysseus While I was away with the Ethiopians. He's close to Phaeacia, where he's destined to escape The great ring of sorrow that has closed around him. But I'll bet I can still blow some trouble his way."

He gathered the clouds, and gripping his trident He stirred the sea. And he raised all the blasts

2. The constellation Ursa Major remains above the horizon.

As it is I am doomed to a wretched death at sea. Three times, four times luckier than I In the world is howling around me. And he's roughened the sea, and every wind It's all coming true. Look at these clouds On the open sea before I ever got home. When she said I would have my fill of sorrow "Now I'm in for it. Hunched over, he spoke to his own great soul: Odysseus felt his knees and heart weaken. And lightning-charged Boreas3 rolled in a big wave. The winds blew hard from every direction, in the desperate fight for Achilles' dead body. Zeus is piling like flowers around the sky's rim, I'm afraid that Calypso was right on target Land and sea together. Night rose in the sky. Of every wind in the world and covered with clouds would have had only I had gone down on that day eeks who died on Troy's wide plain burial then, honored by the army rojan spears

His words weren't out before a huge cresting wave Crashed on his raft and shivered its timbers.

He was pitched clear of the deck. The rudder flew From his hands, the mast cracked in two Under the force of the hurricane winds, And the yardarm and sail hove into the sea. He was under a long time, unable to surface From the heaving swell of the monstrous wave, Weighed down by the clothes Calypso had given him. At last he came up, spitting out saltwater, Seabrine gurgling from his nostrils and mouth. For all his distress, though, he remembered his raft, Lunged through the waves, caught hold of it And huddled down in its center shrinking from death.

320

315

310

305

300

An enormous wave rode the raft into cross-currents.

The North Wind in autumn sweeps through a field Rippling with thistles and swirls them around.

330

325

So the winds swirled the raft all over the sea, South Wind colliding at times with the North, East Wind shearing away from the West.

And the White Goddess saw him, Cadmus' daughter Ino,* once a human girl with slim, beautiful ankles

335

The North Wind.

4. Human girl transformed into a sea nymph.

And rose from the water like a flashing gull, She pitied Odysseus his wandering, his pain Odysseus,5 that he sows all this grief for you? "Poor man. Why are you so odious to Poseidon, Here, wrap this veil tightly around your chest. To the Phaeacians' land, your destined safe harbor. To the winds' will. Swim for your life Take off those clothes and abandon your raft Now do as I say—you're in no way to retuse: But he'll not destroy you, for all of his fury. Perched on his raft, and said this to him: Who had won divine honors in the saltwater gulfs Clear of the shore so it can come back to me." Untie it and throw it into the deep blue sea But when with your hands you touch solid land It's immortally charmed: Fear no harm or death

With these words the goddess gave him the veil And slipped back into the heavy seas
Like a silver gull. The black water swallowed her.
Godlike Odysseus brooded on his trials
And spoke these words to his own great soul:

"Not this. Not another treacherous god Scheming against me, ordering me to abandon my raft. I will not obey. I've seen with my own eyes How far that land is where she says I'll be saved. I'll play it the way that seems best to me. As long as the timbers are still holding together I'll hang on and gut it out right here where I am. When and if a wave shatters my raft to pieces, Then I'll swim for it. What else can I do?"

As he churned these thoughts in the pit of his stomach Poseidon Earthshaker raised up a great wave—An arching, cavernous, sensational tsunami—And brought it crashing down on him.

370

As storm winds blast into a pile of dry chaff And scatter the stuff all over the place,

So the long beams of Odysseus' raft were scattered. He went with one beam and rode it like a stallion, Stripping off the clothes Calypso had given him And wrapping the White Goddess' veil round his chest. Then he dove into the sea and started to swim A furious breaststroke. The Lord of Earthquake saw him And said to himself with a slow toss of his head:

5. There is a pun on Odysseus's name in the Greek, similar to "odious . . . Odysseus."

"That's right. Thrash around in misery on the open sea Until you come to human society again.
I hope that not even then will you escape from evil."
With these words he whipped his sleek-coated horses
And headed for his fabulous palace on Aegae.

340

But Zeus' daughter Athena had other ideas.
She barricaded all the winds but one
And ordered them to rest and fall asleep.
Boreas, though, she sent cracking through the waves,
A tailwind for Odysseus until he was safe on Phaeacia,
And had beaten off the dark birds of death.

500

Two nights and two days the solid, mitered waves Swept him on, annihilation all his heart could foresee. But when Dawn combed her hair in the third day's light, The wind died down and there fell A breathless calm. Riding a swell He peered out and saw land nearby.

You know how precious a father's life is To children who have seen him through a long disease, Gripped by a malevolent spirit and melting away, But then released from suffering in a spasm of joy.

The land and woods were that welcome a sight To Odysseus. He kicked hard for the shoreline, But when he was as close as a shout would carry He heard the thud of waves on the rocks, Thundering surf that pounded the headland And bellowed eerily. The sea churned with foam. There were no harbors for ships, no inlets or bays, Only jutting cliffs and rocks and barnacled crags. Odysseus' heart sank and his knees grew weak. With a heavy sigh he spoke to his own great soul:

405

400

395

390

"Ah, Zeus has let me see land I never hoped to see And I've cut my way to the end of this gulf, But there's no way to get out of the grey saltwater. Only sharp rocks ahead, laced by the breakers, And beyond them slick stone rising up sheer Right out of deep water, no place for a foothold, No way to stand up and wade out of trouble. If I try to get out here a wave might smash me Against the stone cliff. Some mooring that would be! If I swim around farther and try to find A shelving shore or an inlet from the sea, I'm afraid that a squall will take me back out Groaning deeply on the teeming dark water, or some monster will attack me out of the deep

375

4

415

From the swarming brood of great Amphtrite. I know how odious I am to the Earthshaker."

425

As these thoughts welled up from the pit of his stomach A breaker bore him onto the rugged coast. He would have been cut to ribbons and his bones crushed But grey-eyed Athena inspired him.

Slammed onto a rock he grabbed it with both hands And held on groaning until the breaker rolled by. He had no sooner ducked it when the backwash hit him And towed him far out into open water again.

430

It was just like an octopus pulled out of its hole With pebbles stuck to its tentacles,

435

Odysseus' strong hands clinging to the rocks
Until the skin was ripped off. The wave
Pulled him under, and he would have died
Then and there. But Athena was with him.
He surfaced again: the wave spat him up landwards,
And he swam along parallel to the coast, scanning it
For a shelving beach, an inlet from the sea,
And when he swam into the current of a river delta
He knew he had come to the perfect spot,
Lined with smooth rocks and sheltered from the wind.
He felt the flowing of the rivergod, and he prayed:

440

445

"Hear me, Riverlord, whoever you are And however men pray to you: I am a fugitive from the sea And Poseidon's persecution, A wandering mortal, pitiful To the gods, I come to you, To your water and your knees. I have suffered much, O Lord, Lord, hear my prayer."

At these words the god stopped his current,
Made his waters calm and harbored the man
In his river's shallows. Odysseus crawled out
On hands and knees. The sea had broken his spirit.
His whole body was swollen, and saltwater trickled
From his nose and mouth. Breath gone, voice gone,
He lay scarcely alive, drained and exhausted.
When he could breathe again and his spirit returned
He unbound the goddess' veil from his body
And threw it into the sea-melding river
Where it rode the crest of a wave down the current
And into Ino's own hands. He turned away from the river,
Sank into a bed of rushes, and kissed the good earth.
Huddled over he spoke to his own great soul:

"What am I in for now? How will this end? If I keep watch all night here by the river I'm afraid a hard frost—or even a gentle dew—Will do me in, as weak as I am.

The wind blows cold from a river toward dawn.

But if I climb the bank to the dark woods up there And fall asleep in a thicket, even if I survive Fatigue and cold and get some sweet sleep, I'm afraid I'll fall prey to some prowling beast."

475

He thought it over and decided it was better
To go to the woods. They were near the water
On an open rise. He found two olive trees there,
One wild, one planted, their growth intertwined,
Proof against blasts of the wild, wet wind,
The sun unable to needle light through,
Impervious to rain, so thickly they grew
Into one tangle of shadows. Odysseus burrowed
Under their branches and scraped out a bed.
He found a mass of leaves there, enough to keep warm
Two or three men on the worst winter day.
The sight of these leaves was a joy to Odysseus,
And the godlike survivor lay down in their midst
And covered himself up.

485

480

490

A solitary man Who lives on the edge of the wilderness And has no neighbors, will hide a charred log Deep in the black embers and so keep alive The fire's seed and not have to rekindle it From who knows where.

So Odysseus buried Himself in the leaves. And Athena sprinkled His eyes with sleep for quickest release From pain and fatigue.

And she closed his eyelids.

500

455

450

BOOK V

whelmed with fatigue.

But the goddess Ath
off to the land of the Phaeacians,
ple who had once lived in Hypereia,
Crolonous

there he walled off a city, built houses and shrines, and parceled out fields. for he died and went to the world below, himous ruled, wise in the gods' ways.

0

Ł

470